

Source: Nikkei National Museum, 1994-8-129a
The Boeing B-29 Superfortress: Avenger of Pearl Harbor www.nikkeimuseum.org

Army Air Forces photo

General Wolfe, Twentieth Bomber Command Chief, has coffee with Lt. Col. Leonard F. Harmon, a bomber group commander

purpose, honor was due to two brigadier generals whose work hitherto has been little known outside of top military circles. They were Haywood S. Hansell Jr., Chief of Staff of the Twentieth Air Force, and Kenneth B. Wolfe, chief of the Twentieth Bomber Command.

Trapezer: Some say Hansell is called Trapezer because he used to hunt the deer in his native South; others became Chief of Staff of the Twentieth Air Force. He has had his sights on Japan for many months.

Quiet and unassuming, General Hansell is absorbed in his work and is so serious that he is sometimes puzzled by a joke or a gag line. Associates say his fancy dress is not an affectation but an outward manifestation of inner exactness. In staff meetings he demands quick, brief, and