AN EPIC OF VANCOUVER'S LIFE

Vancouver yesterday looked into her history and found it good. Seldom has a more romantic story been unfolded than that which former Mayor Tisdall told to the Vancouver Board of Trade.

His was an epic story of progress, of the growth of city where forests had been, of the development of usiness, of the throwing out of commercial lines which now reach all over the world.

And best of all, it was a record of Vancouver's own people. He told of the fine old families which have done their part to build Vancouver. He gave the tradition and the background which are the prime factors in Vancouver's prestige today.

the modern city builds forever into the future, it is builds and fashions itself with the lessons and a learning and the culture of its past.

to the tearning and the custure of no pass.

Dynamic progress is the selling power of a city, and tradition is the distinction of a city. San Francisco differs from Los Angeles in being a city of maintained traditions. San Francisco has its Stanfords and Crockers and Lelands and those other old families whose námea ir fostera. Vancouver also cherishes its fine old characters and families—its David Oppenheimers, its Salsburys, its Mellers, its David Oppenheimers, its Salsburys, its Mellers, its Didalis, its John Henridys, and many more of that pioneer stock who have an example of the property of the p Vancouver today is proud of these old families and the part they have played in its history. And Van-couver of tomorrow will honor and revere them.

FEAR

Pear is a monster that steals away the intellect, making men into children again, reducing what God intended to be earth's noblest creatures to cowering animals.

Frankly and in detail, Prof. William Ellery Leonard of the University of Wisconsin, poet and author, has told how a fright when he was a child has made his life miserable. As a small boy, "Billy" Leonard was so frightened by an approaching locontive that now, 47 years later, he is fear's slave, cringing before a host of imagined dangers.

"As soon as I get a certain distance from home— a distance varying from yards to miles in the last 15 years—I am overwhelmed by a feeling of insecurity and terror that I can't get back," he says.

"Suppose I am walking down University Drive by the lake. I am a normal man for the first quarter of a mile. For the next 100 yards I am in a mild state of dread; for the next twenty yards in acute state of dread late sen but controlled.

"For the next ten I am in an anguish of terror that has not reached a crisis of explosion. And in half a dozen more steps I am in an afterce a panic of desolation, from the steps I am in as fifter as panic of desolation, from the pand home and in as great a dread of immediate she as a man in a window high up in a skyster-ster with the flames lapping his shoulders.

For Prof. Leonard the spectre of death burks everywhere when he ventures out for a walk. He fears the water, fears going down strange steps. The ogre of fear that has invaded his mind guides him to new tortures. Fear grows, just as the imagination gains rein. Charlie Chaplin expresses it in comedy when he starts brawley through a dark street, in one of his pictures, then begins to wonder, then to whistle, then to walk faster, carting backward glances over his shoulder, then Charles.

Fear steals reason. It is one of the worst foes man so to fight. Smug satisfaction has its disadvantages, tif a man be slow to fear, he has much to be

OH, NO, PROFESSOR!

OH, NO, PROFESSOR!

A professor in an Eastern university, surfeited perhaps with the sight of ladies in bathing auits wherever he may have gone during the late summer, suggests that man is the more beautiful creature, after all, and that he would like to see a men's beauty contex. Somehow we feel that we should be spared this pleasant vision. Our interest in any bathing beauty contest in which makes paraded would be purely a brick-throwing one. We are not quite ready to take our men in that form.

contest in which make period take our men in that form.

Men's figures may be more beautiful than women's, professor, we're' not going to battle over that. We'll grant that we've seen men in bathing saits who looked a bit better off anatomically than some of the damsel who have exhibited their figures in beach contests.

who have exhibited their figures in beach contests, the professor, did you ever try to form a mental picture of what a mena beauty parade would be like? Just suppose a men's show were held in Vancouver or any other place you care to name. Can you see them? We can, a bunch of furtive, blushing sheep, fallen fruiter noble estate, looking for all the world like a flock of penguins in a wind-storm, with the same cheerful faces the angels must have worn when they were chased from heaven.

No, professor, this is just a little feature for the ladies. They have more nerve or something-or-other than the men have—at least they can adapt themselve to it with something of grace, no matter what their

Just think, professor, what a life the man would face who might win one of those male beauty contests! We'd say he'd have somewhat of a heetic, turbulent ties of it.

No, professor, we fear you're just a bit sarcastic.

The Call of the Sea

By MERVYN MULLDOON, 1810 Feanklin St. I love the salty blasts of spouting sea-foam That whirl across the boiling waves of storm: Such mighty smatic round our plunging sea-home Within my beating heart fans mem ries warm.

I love the waves, mountainous and tremendous, That crash in sumuli's vassalage aloud; These naked, virgin arms that rear stupendous— O grant me nothing fairer for a shroud!

I love the storm-wind, blasting most uproarious, I drink me deep the fragrance that it bears From belching skies above us raging glorious— To such alone I lift my thankful prayers.

The roaring thunder of the storm-swept ocean.
The mad outpourings of the wind-swept sky.
Arouse but evermore my true devotion—
O may they chant my requiem when I die!

O let me feel the storm wind flooding o'er me— The agitated turmoil of the deep— And hear the turnule of great spaces stormy. Then I shall sink me into restful sleep.
