B.C. Security Commission Given 'Biggest Single Task Of War In Canada'

First of two articles on the lesser-known factors in the Japanese evacuation... By SYDNEY SCOTT. The Federal Government this week handed over to the British Columbia Security Commission probably the most formidable and least enviable individual task of the war in Canada.

It told the commission to pluck out 22,800 souls from the east coast and 500 occupations in one part of Canada and to set them down again in strange occupations... None Must Ever Return One chief injunction Ottawa gave. This was that none of the 22,800 must ever return to the Pacific Coast, from which they are being sent, until the war is over.

It hadn't dealt—as a further article will—of the pilgrimages of individual families and groups of families across the mountains independent of the commission... Hain't Dealt With Pool Tag It hadn't dealt—with the plan for manning pools, perhaps on exhibition grounds and elsewhere, so that evacuees can be concentrated, watched, protected and more easily moved.

HIGHWAY ADVOCATES GLAD, MAD Delegate Dimond Pleased Action Taken, Even If Wrong

By E. T. ELSON. (Special Correspondent of The Daily Province and Associated Southern Press). WASHINGTON March 7.—Prime Minister Mackenzie King's announcement that agreement for a full agreement on the United States will construct the highway to Alaska is welcomed here as a very necessary step in the defense of the hemisphere. More impatient people said "it's about time". There has been an increasing demand for action as the position of Alaska in world strategy has become increasingly clear and a nation thoroughly aroused and agitated through shortsightedness evidenced by the southern Pacific and anxious to see the era of "too little and too late" ended before an actual attack by Japan upon this continent.

PURELY MILITARY ROUTE. Mr. King's announcement that a... was a plain warning to members with parochial ideas as to how the new highway would do good to all.
