would transform ritzy fairways into parade grounds for soldiers in training, Trils radical proposal was advanced by Stanley Thompson, of Toronto, golf architect and a former champion himself. Without any manifest sympathy for his fellow golfers, Mr. Thompson signesses one-third of the nation's " 700-odd courses shut down for the war's duration.

He gave as his view that exclusive the gave as his view that exclusive clubinouses could be used as military training headquarters, particularly for local reserve units. Deserted fairways would echo to the tramp of trainees on drill manoeuvres.

"It wouldn't hurt the courses at all," Mr. Thompson said in an interview. "With reasonable care, top dressing and judiclous fertilizing, they could be restored three months after the streament." after the war ended."

DESIGNED COURSES

Mr. Thompson ought to know He has designed ninety-six of the most picturesque courses in the country, including Banti Springs, Alta, and Capilano in Vancouver.

His shut-down plan for golf had several other features he believed would help the war effort. "Approximately $60,000,000 is invested foday in courses, clubhouses, land and equipment," the architect said. "It takes several million more sald. "It takes several million more each year for labor and material to keep the courses running.

"About one-third of these could comfortably close down for the duration. If the extra money went to the Government, it would buy a lot of war machines. Thousands of
